Girls Scouts Western Oklahoma girls aren't simply showing up to their new camp. They've been involved in the design and construction of Camp Trivera since day one.

The camp opens in September and will be one of eight STEM Centers of Excellence within the Girls Scouts of the U.S.'s system. The first center is in the Dallas area.

The $12.2 million Camp Trivera is the newest tenant in the Adventure District. It sits across the lake from the Oklahoma City Zoo and around the bend from the Oklahoma Firefighters Museum.

Because of the Girls Scouts' focus on science, technology, engineering and math, a construction project was an ideal time for the girls to learn another situation in which those principles applied to the real world.

“We wanted the girls to have the opportunity to learn, so it was important for us to pick partners that allowed them to do that,” said Shannon Evers, CEO of Girl Scouts of Western Oklahoma.

Rees designed Camp Trivera and Lingo managed the construction process. Lingo Project Manager Katie Walker oversaw the work and helped the girls better understand how the building would come together.

Rees Vice President Farooq Karim said Rees took special care in assembling the team to work on the project.
